Fourteenth Sunday in Ordinary Time

On this fourteenth Sunday in Ordinary Time, we are called to deliberate on our call to discipleship. Jesus's desire and prayer that God should send out more laborers for his harvest is not limited in scope. Bringing the good news of God to the world goes beyond the work of ministerial priesthood and embraces the royal priesthood in which all of us, baptized into Christ, have a share. Everyone, baptized into Christ, has a special duty to perform due to the vastness of the field. Jesus's appointment of the seventy-two others is symbolic of the invitation thrown to you, the royal priesthood, the Christ's faithful, to get involved in spreading the good news to your communities, workplaces and wherever your relevance is needed.

Accomplishing this mission is not an easy task. As parents, you may not always be understood and appreciated by your own children in your bid to put them on the right track when they seem to be backsliding. In the same vein, your good counsel may not make sense to others in your family, community and even in the church when you have a different perspective that will make life more meaningful to live. When faced with opposition, there is no need to defend yourself. Rather, keep your cool so as to not expose yourselves to the devouring anger and aggression of those whose thoughts may not align with yours. It is God who brings success to the works of our hands. He says to you today: "Do not rejoice because the spirits are subject to you, but rejoice because your names are written in heaven." (Lk. 10: 20) -Father Emmanuel
